1. COURSE OBJECTIVES

With over 50% of global ODA (official development assistance) the European Union is the world's largest actor in international development cooperation. The sector is an important element of EU external relations and a core component of what is often referred to as the EU's soft power. Yet the full realisation of this potential power has often been elusive as Member States have traditionally been reluctant to give up sovereignty in this sector and the integration process has been slow. The claim is now also threatened by the expected departure of the United Kingdom, the Member State with, currently, the largest aid budget. This optional course thus seeks to introduce students to the role of the European Union in international development cooperation, give them an appreciation of the contribution that the EU makes to this important area of global affairs and help them develop an understanding of how the internal organisation and dynamics of the sector have evolved to give European development cooperation its current status as an area of shared competence between the EU institutions and Member States. A central thread running through the course will be to explore whether or not, and despite the threat of Brexit, further integration in this field of EU external action would improve performance and serve the best interests of developing countries.

From small beginnings as a side programme to 'associate' a group of overseas states and territories to the new Community of the six signatories of the Treaty of Rome, European development cooperation has evolved into an increasingly integrated assembly of bilateral and community partnership programmes covering all regions of the developing world and with a particular focus on cooperation with Africa. With the growing scale and widening scope of this common effort has also come increased influence in the OECD DAC, the UN and other international development fora where the EU is now a major driver of policy debate and reform. Inside the EU, development cooperation has also had to find its place in the increasingly complex world of EU external relations, working hand in hand not just with common commercial policy, but, in the past decade, with other areas of concern such as humanitarian assistance, foreign and security policy or migration policy. The Lisbon Treaty opened up a new chapter with the European Commission having to share its responsibility for development cooperation with the European External Action Service.

With the agreement in 2015 of a new set of UN Global Goals to replace the Millennium Development Goals, this is an important threshold moment in the debate on international development cooperation. The course will therefore also seek to introduce students to the main emerging strands of thinking in this wider global debate and the impact these are likely to have on European international cooperation.

At the end of this course, the student will be able to

- better understand both the conceptual and practical perspectives on certain aspects of the EU's development policy and international cooperation, particularly with respect to Africa
- critically assess and explain the European development cooperation policies
- operate effectively in the work environment of the wider EU development cooperation sector, either in the EU institutions, in EU Member State ministries of foreign affairs or development cooperation or in the European international development NGO sector

2. LEARNING OUTCOMES

The course objectives tie in with the following learning outcomes of the programme EU International Relations and Diplomacy Studies:

1.1 The graduate masters the most important theoretical approaches and concepts of International Relations, EU Studies and Diplomacy Studies relevant for the analysis of the role of the European Union in international affairs.

1.2 The graduate can describe, explain and illustrate the current state of scientific research in the field of EU external relations in a broad sense and is able to critically assess the results of this research.

1.3 The graduate has good knowledge of the institutional architecture and the decision-making processes in the European Union and in particular in EU external relations.

1.4 The graduate has acquired insights into the political, legal and economic aspects of EU external action and can use these insights to contextualise and interpret new developments.

1.5 The graduate is able to incorporate knowledge and understanding of various fields of EU external action and of different related disciplines (such as Political Science, International Relations, Law, Economics) at the interface between EU affairs and world politics.

2.2 The graduate has the ability to critically reflect upon problems in international and European affairs, to adopt well-informed points of view and to communicate them effectively orally and in writing, whether working independently or in a team.

2.3 The graduate can independently formulate a research question within the field of European affairs, find, select and critically assess relevant sources, answer the question using typical concepts and methods and present the research results in line with the ethical rules of the discipline.

2.4 The graduate is capable of processing a large amount of information within a short period of time and to work efficiently and effectively through planning, organising, setting priorities and meeting deadlines.

2.5 The graduate has the intellectual maturity and skills to function responsibly and autonomously in a professional context at national, European or international level and the capacity of suggesting possible action that contributes to problem-solving in a creative way.

3.2 The graduate has acquired profound insights into specific fields of EU foreign economic policies and related challenges of sustainable development.

The course objectives tie in with the following learning outcomes of the programme Transatlantic Affairs:

1.1 The graduate masters the most important theoretical approaches and concepts of, depending on his or her disciplinary focus, Economics, International Relations and Diplomacy Studies, Legal Studies and/or Political Science relevant for the analysis of transatlantic affairs.

1.2 The graduate can describe, explain and illustrate the current state of scientific research in the field of transatlantic affairs in a broad sense and, is, in line with his or her disciplinary focus, able to critically assess the results of this research.

1.3 The graduate has good knowledge of, depending on his or her disciplinary focus, the political and/or legal systems, the decision-making processes, the economic structures and the main internal and external policies of the European Union and the United States.

1.4 The graduate has insights into historical, political, legal and economic aspects of transatlantic affairs as well as into those policy areas that are of essential importance to transatlantic affairs. He or she can use these insights to contextualize and interpret new developments.

1.5 The graduate is able to incorporate knowledge and understanding of various fields of transatlantic affairs and of different related disciplines (such as Economics, International Relations, Legal Studies, Political Science) as well as to adopt both a European and a US perspective on transatlantic affairs.

2.2 The graduate has the ability to critically reflect upon problems regarding an extensive range of transatlantic affairs, to adopt well-informed points of view and to communicate them effectively orally and in writing, whether working independently or in a team.

2.3 The graduate can independently transform complex transatlantic issues into a research question within the broader field of transatlantic affairs and, depending on his or her disciplinary focus, find, select and critically assess relevant sources, answer the question using appropriate concepts and methods and present the research results in line with the ethical rules of the chosen discipline.

2.4 The graduate is capable of processing a large amount of information and appropriately analyse relevant sources depending on his or her disciplinary focus within a short period of time and of suggesting possible actions that contribute to problem-solving in a creative way.

2.5 The graduate has the intellectual maturity and skills to take responsibilities and function autonomously in a professional environment at national or international level, and especially in a transatlantic context, and to work efficiently and effectively through planning, organizing, setting priorities, meeting deadlines, cooperating across cultural boundaries and networking.
